The value of experience There is no "quick and easy" way to learn Photoshop. You need to be willing to sacrifice a little bit of time and patience, be willing to work at the program, and be willing to have a notebook or other useful reference as you work. Even more difficult is to hone those skills. You need to try lots of things and experiment with various processes for learning to do things efficiently. You'll need to be willing to take on some less-than-perfect images and be prepared for the occasional bummer. The truth is that no two images are the same, and attempting to master Photoshop means surrendering your expectations of what is possible. To that end, you will need to find a willing mentor.

The University of Kansas is once again competing for federal funds, but according to a 2011 publication by The Chronicle of Higher Education, the school could be facing a “millennial” budget shortfall if it is successful. The report, “The University of Kansas Faces a ‘Millennial’ Faculty Shortage,” notes that in the next 12 to 15 years, 78,000 additional graduates will enter the workforce compared to the past two decades. The report says that KU will be obligated to offer 60 more degree or certificate programs by 2020 than it offered 10 years ago, in addition to existing offerings. The report says that due to attrition and other issues, KU has only 1,829 tenure-track faculty positions, compared to a projected 2,164 to 2,276 faculty positions by 2022. The report also says that KU has not increased its number of administrators over the past decade and that it is doing a poor job in recruiting faculty from Kansas, other states and abroad. KU's 2011 strategic planning report showed that it was hard to find Kansans with the kind of education and training needed to be a tenure-track faculty member at KU. "The problem is serious," the report said. "... we would have to compete for faculty from other states by subsidizing tuition at our competitors. We would have to compete for faculty from international and international research partners by subsidizing their tuition, which inevitably would lead to some of our students receiving more than one-half of their financial aid in the form of subsidized tuition. “The reality of our size is that we will be forced to subsidize education of our students.” ‘Limited vision’ The university’s Chancellor Freeman Spogli announced in October that he is retiring and recommending a salary of $700,000, or about $48,000 more than what he was paid this year. The Chronicle reports that Spogli didn't request the substantial raise in salary when he was first hired in 2006, and he was making $370,000 when he was named chancellor, according to the report. Another high profile story focused on the KU administration this week, when its 10-year business plan was released. The report, unveiled Monday, shows that KU will have to cut $62 million over the next two
